The questions relating to the value of sorghum for food for men or animals, of its use as forage, or for the manufacture of spirits, glucose, beer, and vinegar, c., are all subordinate to the sugar-producing value of the plant. For more than a quarter of a century sirup has been made from sorghum, over a wide range of country in the United States, both north and south, and for a time it was confidently believed that sorghum culture would assume great importance as a source of cane-sugar. Many efforts were made to establish this industry in various places as a part of the domestic work of the farm. These attempts were rarely other than disappointments. Occasionally, here and there, good crude sugar was made, and it was frequently observed that the sirup, when permitted to stand for a length of time, deposited crystals of cane sugar. But, on the whole, the attempts to manufacture sugar from sorghum, on a scale of commercial importance, were a failure up to the time when the Department of Agriculture took in hand, in its chemical division, the solution of the sugar problem. That the sorghum was, under certain conditions imperfectly understood, capable of producing cane-sugar, admitted of no doubt, but what the conditions of success were was not known. How confused, contradictory, and ill-digested the state of our knowledge...
